Battalion welcomes new commander

By Cpl. Quentin Grogan
Combat Correspondent

A new battalion commander assumed his post during a change of command ceremony held Friday at Boll Field.

Capt. Fred Glencamp succeeded Maj. Regina Gustavsson as commanding officer of Headquarters Battalion, MCLB Barstow.

Gustavsson is moving on to Japan where she is slated to be the adjutant for Marine Wing Support Group 17.

The Sumter, S.C., native joined the Marine Corps when he was 17 years old and began his career as an enlisted Marine.

At the age of 23, and a sergeant, Glencamp began his tour as a drill instructor at Parris Island, S.C.

After his tour as a drill instructor, Glencamp served a tour with 3rd Marine Regiment in Hawaii. It was there where his career began to change after a lieutenant gave him an observation.

"He told me that I had the qualities and credentials to be a Marine Corps officer. I had never even considered it before that, but when he mentioned it, it stayed with me," said Glencamp.

At his next duty station, MCLB Albany, Ga., another officer, this time a major told him the same thing as the lieutenant, thus confirming the observation. Lt. Col. Joel Davis, the major who had suggested to Glencamp about being an officer and his commanding officer at the time, guided Glencamp towards the Meritorious Commissioning Program.

In 2000, he submitted his package to the program and was selected. He then attended Officer Candidate School and was promoted to gunnery sergeant while attending. In December of 2001, he graduated OCS and was promoted to second lieutenant.

As an obligation to the Meritorious Commissioning Program, Glencamp finished college and received a bachelor's degree from Chapman University, Calif.

In July 2006, Glencamp arrived at MCLB Barstow where he took over as Headquarters

Battalion executive officer and the Director of Base Operations and Logistics.

"The battalion is lucky to get him," said Gustavsson about her successor.

Right turn; wrong choice

In 1914, the Balkan Peninsula, which included countries like Serbia, Albania, Romania and Greece, was known as the "Powder Keg" of Europe.

The political unrest in this region was so tense that people knew it was only a matter of time before war erupted in that part of the world.

On June 28, 1914, that eruption occurred. Austro-Hungarian Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, Sophie, were visiting the Austrian province of Bosnia-Herzegovina at the request of the province's governor.

Ferdinand knew that such a trip would be dangerous since the people in this area resented Austrian rule. Nevertheless, the archduke and his wife agreed to the visit.

What the archduke did not know was that a secret society of Serbian nationals known as the Black Hand, was meeting to arrange for the archduke's assassination.

When the Black Hand received word that the archduke would be in Bosnia-Herzegovina they sent three men to assassinate him.

The archduke arrived by train in Bosnia-Herzegovina at 10 a.m. that Sunday morning and joined a motorcade traveling to the reception honoring the archduke's arrival.

The archduke and his wife insisted on the car top being off so that they could view and be viewed by the crowds attending.

As they made their way from the train station towards the grand reception area, one of the assassins tossed a grenade into the motorcade the archduke was riding in.

When the archduke's driver saw the object coming towards his vehicle, he accelerated and the grenade exploded beneath the car behind him, wounding its occupants but saving the archduke.

As the motorcade proceeded, the Highlanders find success

By Cpl. Ryan C. Heiser
Combat Correspondent

RAWAH, IRAQ, (JUNE 1, 2007) - The Marines of 1st Light Armored Reconnaissance Battalion, Regimental Combat Team 2, affectionately nicknamed 'The Highlanders,' kicked off Operation Cave Dweller on June 1, in the western Euphrates River valley.

The operation covered several areas, which were flagged by the battalion for investigation, on both the north and south sides of the river.

"We went out to search different cave systems and suspected cache sites, looking for present caches or possible places where there could be a cache in the future," said Sgt. Alfredo Gonzales, a scout with the battalion.

The operation included several units from throughout the battalion, including: Company C, security forces, jump platoon, and the military working dogs.

"We went out to areas of interest and conducted dismounted patrols through the desert's hills, cliffs, and rocks," said 1st Lance Cpl. Daniel Venegas Jr., a battalion scout.

The Marines mapped out all the caves they found, and searched the ones that were large enough to fit into. In some cases the caves were so large they couldn't be searched; the Marines didn't even flinch in these situations.

They used explosives to safely detonate the entrances, so the cave systems couldn't be used to store anything in the future.

"We found some deep caves that an average sized man would have no problem getting into and walking around in, those are the ones we were most worried about. We got some pictures of them and their grid locations just in case we need to reference them in the future," said Gonzales, a native of Adelanto, Calif.

While searching through the caves, one group came across a cache which housed 30 pounds of explosive material and a 57mm rocket.

"I think we find something on just about every mission we go out on. I'd say that's pretty successful," said Gonzales.

While searching through the seemingly endless desert, it wasn't uncommon for the Marines to find themselves climbing steep rock cliffs, crawling through tight caverns, or walking down a dry riverbed.

"It might seem a little tedious, and its definitely tiring being in the sun all day, but you have to remember we are out here to prevent terrorists and murderers from killing our brothers and friends," said Venegas, a San Antonio native. "It is imperative that we take away their stuff, whatever it might be, and any possible place they may want to use to store it in the future."

The first MCLB Barstow known distance rifle range qualification ended yesterday, ending the first rifle qualification on base in three years. To qualify, Marines must be accurate from 200, 300 and 500 yards in the prone, sitting, kneeling and standing positions. Little known STD causes well known problems

By Cpl. Nich R. Babb
Combat Correspondent

When people hear the words "Sexually Transmitted Disease", the words tend to sting the ears like a soldering iron that has nicked an index finger. Everyone is aware of the potential harm these diseases have on their well-being, but not many people like to address the issues. However, as some wise individuals have said, a good defense against STDs is to know how to stay protected.

According to the Center for Disease Control, there are more than 100 types of the Human Papilloma Virus, with around 30 of them that affects the genital area. The result of an HPV infection are warts that occur on people's skin, and to include warts or lesions appearing on the skin of the genitals or backside.

HPV is a prevalent virus that is not only transmitted in the traditional sense of an STD, but through casual contact as well, said Lt. Cmdr. Bernhard Stepke, former officer in charge, branch medical clinic.

Due to the simplicity of spreading the virus, there are about 20 million people within the U.S. infected with HPV. Although not all cases involve genital HPV, 6.2 million Americans get a genital HPV infection every year.

Genital HPV infections can be highly unsightly and a burden on a person's well being, but the infection can be more serious than just bumps, according to the American Social Health Association.

The virus has actually been shown to increase the chances of cervical cancer within women who are infected with certain types of it, states ASHA.

Certain strains of HPV that have been linked to cervical cancer do not cause genital warts. This could be bad, because there are no visual symptoms that would clue a doctor into the presence of an HPV strain.

As such, it is recommended that women receive annual Pap screenings that test for HPV infections and other ailments, Stepke said.

To be specific, a Pap screen looks for abnormalities within the cervix, and if the test is positive the results are sent to a lab for further testing, said Stepke. Cancer can actually be prevented or treated more effectively if there is early detection of abnormal cells within the cervical tissue.

Men can also carry strains of genital HPV, but their test is not as intensive as a woman's, said Stepke. The only thing a physician can do is to inspect the genital area for warts or lesions, which makes it imperative for men to get any visible abnormality investigated by a physician as soon as it reveals itself.

Since individuals can carry HPV without having any noticeable symptoms, being sexually active can make staying protected from the virus a tricky process, according to the CDC.

The surest way to not get HPV, is to refrain from any genital contact with other individuals, states the CDC. However, if a person does choose to engage in intimate relationships, having a long-term mutually monogamous relationship with an uninfected person is a very effective strategy.

Unfortunately, "HPV cannot be prevented with a condom," said Stepke.

Both male and female genital areas separated by a latex condom are not immune to being infected by HPV, according to the CDC.

If a person is infected with HPV, there is no cure for the virus, says Stepke. Controlling outbreaks of warts though is possible by maintaining a healthy immune system.

In addition, creams and ointments are used to help treat the infection, and warts can be removed by freezing, burning and using laser treatment on them, Stepke said.

As one can see, HPV is a common STD that can cause a lot of damage if the circumstances are just right. HPV causes warts and can increase the chances of cancer developing. Even condoms are not a fool proof way of prevention.

Spinal Cord Injuries

Did You Know?

- Every 41 minutes a person in the U.S. sustains a spinal cord injury.
- There are about 11,000 new cases of spinal cord injury reported each year in the U.S.
- It is estimated there are 222,000 to 285,000 people in the U.S. with spinal cord injuries.
- Males are more likely to sustain a spinal cord injury and account for over 78% of injuries reported.
- Reports show most people who suffer spinal cord injuries are between the ages of 16 and 30, but the average age at injury has been steadily rising.

From Sweden, to USA, Barstow and on, Marine Corps officer departs Barstow en route to Japan

By Cpl. Quentin Grogan
Combat Correspondent

For a little girl being born in a small town in Sweden, the idea graduating from a college in the United States may have been a far fetched idea. Then throw in the idea of being an officer in the United States Marine Corps in charge of a battalion.

For one person, Maj. Regina Margareta Gustavsson, or Major "G" as she is referred to most by Marines, it was not just an idea, it is reality.

Born in Lilla Edet, Sweden, a town with all of 2,000 residents, Gustavsson first came to the U.S. a year after graduating from high school, she said. At first, her intention was to visit for a short time in 1988 and then return to Sweden. About 19 years later, Gustavsson is now an American citizen.

"I always knew I would end up [in the U.S.]," said Gustavsson.

In August 1993, she enrolled at the University of Memphis and two years later, she graduated with a Bachelor of Science in Architectural Engineering Technology.

After completing her degree requirements, Gustavsson had been in the U.S. long enough to apply for her citizenship, which she got. Upon her becoming a U.S. citizen, she gave up her Swedish citizenship.

"I don't want there to be any confusion on where my loyalty lies," said Gustavsson in regards to her being an officer in the Marine Corps and giving up her citizenship in Sweden.

With her family back in Sweden, Gustavsson decided to join the Marine Corps and serve her newly adopted country. Ever since arriving in the states, she has known she wanted to serve her country.

In 1996, she was commissioned a second lieutenant, and after completing The Basic School, Quantico, Va., Gustavsson began her career as the adjutant for Marine Corps Air Station Beaufort, S.C.

Gustavsson served as the adjutant at different bases and served as the executive officer and commanding officer for the Personnel Support Detachment, Marine Aircraft Group 13.

In September 2004, then Capt. Gustavsson arrived at MCLB Barstow where she became the director of the Administration and Support Department.

Early 2006 was a good year for Gustavsson. On May 1, she was frocked to the rank of major and a month later, she took command of Headquarters Battalion.

"For a Marine, it is always exciting to have the chance to take command. As an administrator I feel really lucky, since this is my second time in command, it's kind of unusual for us to get command as often as [other billets]," said Gustavsson when she took command of the battalion.

One of her hobbies, which is also unique to MCLB Barstow, is horses.

It is fitting for Gustavsson, who has her own American Quarter Horse named Decker, to be stationed at a base with the only mounted color guard in the Marine Corps.

For an officer other than the base commanding officer, it is rare to ride with the mounted color guard. As a captain, Gustavsson got a chance to ride one of the horses in the Rose Parade in 2005.

"This has been a good experience for me," said Gustavsson. "This is a tough place for a Marine to come, especially on their first tour. We have great Marines here and we have some really motivated Marines here."

After her tour here, Gustavsson will be on her way to Japan to be the adjutant for Marine Wing Support Group 17, which she will meet up with in South Korea.

Maj. Regina Gustavsson received her command guidon from Headquarters Battalion, during her going away barbecue following the change of command ceremony June 15. The guidon was signed by those Marines under her charge.

As for her future in the Marine Corps, she says she will stay in as long as they will let her.

"No where else in the world can you do what we do [as Marines]," said Gustavsson.

The 11 officers completed four weeks of rigorous training, with follow-on training to come, and are ready to go to work. According to MCPD Chief Charles Chase this is not the largest class they have had, but it is the most experienced.

II Marine Expeditionary Force

MARINE CORPS BASE CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. -- A 15-minute drive through Fallujah, Iraq, on June 23, 2005, turned into one of the worst days in history for female U.S. Marines. A suicide bomber drove his car into a convoy, causing a massive explosion that killed three women and three men and severely burnt seven other women.

Cpl. Ramona M. Valdez, a communications specialist with Headquarters Battalion, 2nd Marine Division, II Marine Expeditionary Force (Forward), was serving with the Female Search Force when she was killed in the attack while the convoy was on its way back to Camp Fallujah.

To honor the memory of the fallen Marine corporal, the II MEF Communications Training Center was dedicated as the Valdez Training Facility during a building dedication ceremony here, June 1.

Valdez, a Purple Heart Medal recipient, was an invaluable member of the 2nd Marine Division Communication Operations Section during operations in Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Valdez's most significant work was with Division's Counter Improvised Explosive Device Working Group. The success of the tests conducted Elida Valdez, mother of Cpl. Ramona M. Valdez, touches a newly-revealed plaque outside the Valdez Training Facility during a building dedication ceremony. Cpl. Valdez, was serving with the Female Search Force when she was killed after a suicide bomber attacked her convoy on its way back to Camp Fallujah, Iraq.

by CIEDWG was in a large part attributed to Valdez's knowledge of single-channel radios.

The impact Valdez made in her field was a driving force behind the dedication of a top communications training facility.

"Her legacy will live on here for years to come," said Col. John A. Del Colliano, the division chief for network plans and policy for Command, Control, Communications and Computers, Headquarters Marine Corps. "We're dedicating a training facility in her honor to guarantee future Marines have the same skills and knowledge when they get to the field."

Valdez, who joined the Marine Corps in 2002 to help support her mother, was featured on a plaque affixed near the entrance of the training facility.

Valdez's mother, Elida Valdez, was overcome with emotion as she cut the building's ribbon and approached the newly revealed plaque.

"We have not traveled these long distances to honor a building," said Master Gunnery Sgt. Keith A. Sylvain, the communications information systems chief for Marine Forces Reserve. "We pay tribute to not only Corporal Valdez but what she represents. She's a perfect selection to not only represent the communications community but the (noncommissioned officer) corps."

Before the ceremony concluded, the crowd witnessed the first Radio Operators Course class graduation from the newly-named Valdez Training Facility.

Communications is a rapidly growing field that has advanced significantly throughout the years. Valdez established herself as a pathfinder for future generations to learn and grow from.

"Her name will be associated at a crossroads for communications in the Marine Corps," Del Colliano.

two other assassins blended into the crowd each with a pistol. One tried to fire a shot at the archduke but his weapon malfunctioned and the other could not get a clear shot because of the chaotic crowd. After the grenade went off they ran to regroup at a pre-designated rendezvous. However, on the way back, one of the assassins, Gavrilo Princip, got lost and found himself in an alley all alone.

At the reception, the archduke inquired about his injured party members. When told they had been seriously wounded and were in the hospital, he insisted on visiting them. Although his advisors warned him of the dangers of returning to the streets, the archduke insisted and the motorcade began its trek across town.

In order to avoid the frenzied crowds, the governor decided that the royal car should go straight down Appel Quay; but in the chaos he forgot to tell the driver. As the car neared the hospital, the driver turned right onto Franz Joseph Street and into the sights of the misplaced assassin standing just five feet away. Realizing his error, the driver put the car into reverse and began to back down the street. However, Princip, not wanting to lose this second opportunity, drew his pistol and fired several shots into the vehicle. The archduke was shot in the back and his wife in the abdomen. Within hours both were dead.

And so, all because of a driver's wrong turn, the world was plunged into one of the bloodiest wars of all time. For the next four years, the nations of the world battled each other in the Great War. Almost 13 million people died and 21 were wounded as a result of World War I. Could all of this been avoided if the driver had been told which way to go and had not made that fateful right turn?

The answer to that will never be known. Of course we do not blame one innocent driver for the affairs of the entire world and the bloodshed of millions. For I am sure the driver did not purposely place his archduke in the line of an assassin's bullet.

He may have thought that he was doing what was best. However, regardless of his well-meaning intentions, the archduke did come face to face with an assassin because of just one wrong turn.

You know the saying...hindsight is 20/20? I am sure the driver would like to have retraced his route and changed the outcome, but he could not. And neither do we have that luxury. What had been done was final.

There is a valuable principle to be learned. That principle: You only get one chance, so remember—everything you do matters.

So often we get caught up in a mentality that only certain things matter and other things are insignificant.

The problem with such a mindset is that we often do not understand the significance of our action until it is well past time. Therefore, it is our obligation to live in such a way that allows for no idleness. This is especially important for the Christian.

As a child of God, you should do everything to honor Him. Everything matters for the cause of Christ. I Corinthians 3:13 even teaches that "Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." Are you living in light of the fact that everything you do in life will be revealed someday?

The passage goes on to say that meaningless works (selfish acts) will be like wood and hay and will be destroyed by the fire of God's judgment; while righteous works (work done for Christ's glory) will be like gold and silver that is only enhanced by fire.

So, as a Christian, what are you doing?

Are you taking well-meaning but wrong turns?

Or are you paying attention, making sure that every deed is being done for our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ?

The March of Dimes is saving babies...

After the March of Dimes defeated polio in the 1950s, we turned our attention to preventing birth defects and other threats to infant health. Today, we're fighting premature birth — the leading cause of newborn death. Half a million babies are born too soon every year. We're working to find out why ... and how premature birth can be prevented.
